

White-Headed Duck

Native to North Africa and Central Asia

Endangered

These ducks are part of a family known as “stiff-tails,” due to their tail feathers sticking straight out. Males not only have the titular white head, they also sport bright, baby-blue beaks. Both features are useful at attracting females during the breeding season. Habitat loss and illegal hunting are the main reasons why this bird is endangered.

World Waterfowl Day

